NUMISMATIC STRAYS AND EXILES

The many numismatists in America who collect the coins of their own country, rarely consider the coins of other countries, or else they fail to appreciate the fact that while America is a large and populous land, there are yet many other large and civilized nations whose coins are comparable to our own in beauty and of interest to many other numismatists.

The practice of collecting coins is by no means a monopoly confined to the United States and Canada. Although there are millions of collectors of coins in the world today, hardly a fifth of these are to be found in the United States and Canada.

The fact is, however, that there is probably as great a number of active, ardent collectors in Great Britain say, as in America, without taking into consideration those of other countries. These numismatists reciprocate the American disinterest in the beautiful coinage of their own country by giving no thought to those of the United States and Canada.

Many of the rarer pieces of foreign coinage eventually find their way back to the country of their origin. An interesting fact about foreign coins is that many a coin which may be exceedingly rare abroad and worth a high premium there, is more likely to be found here in the United States than in its homeland. Sometimes in the past the whole, or nearly all, of an issue of coins of a European country may have been carried or sent overseas. For instance, in 1645 the Dutch issued coins for their Indies, none of which circulated in the Netherlands. The coins did not remain in the Indies but found their way to New York where they circulated throughout the American Colonies. In Holland today there are numerous wealthy collectors who would gladly pay a large sum for such coins which in the United States are merely curious old coins considered secondary in interest to a collector of American coins. A second instance of foreign coins used abroad is that well-known series of Wood's coinage coined for Ireland but repudiated by the Irish and sent to America where they circulated widely in the American Colonies.

How many rare large cents or silver dollars of the United States repose among the discards of some European collector's accumulation is not known, but there are many thousands of these exiles which would be welcomed back to the country from which they were taken by foreign sailors or travelers of perhaps a century ago. - Pelbe

JEWISH

When we look in a Bible Concordance, if it is a complete one, we may be quite surprised to find we can count the word "shekel" ninety-five times in the Old Testament, and not a single time in the New. We know that all of those references must have applied to a certain weight of metal, not once to a coin. It is when we enter upon those exceedingly valuable books of Jewish history, THE MACCABEES in the APOCRYPHA, that we find the Jews about to have their own money, struck by themselves for themselves: "I give thee leave to coin money for thy country with thine own stamp." (Mac. 15: 6)

Those were the words written to Simon Maccabaeus "the high priest and prince of his nation, and to the people of the Jews," by Antiochus VII (Sidetes - pronounced an-tie' o-cus sy-day' teezy, king of Syria. He was called Sidetes because he was born at Side in Pamphylia of southern Asia Minor. As king of Syria he now had dominion over the Jews. With this permission given by him there appeared the first coins of the Jews; that is, they are accepted as first by most numismatists -- shekels and half-shekels, made in the first year of Simon Maccabaeus, which corresponds with B. C. 139.

The issues of shekels and half-shekels were undoubtedly small, for they seem to have disappeared from circulation by Jesus' time. The year of Simon Maccabaeus in which they were made is always indicated above the cup on the obverse. In the field, reading right to left, in Samaritan characters, is the inscription "Shekel Israel." The design is generally supposed to represent the pot of manna:

"And Moses said unto Aaron, Take a pot, and put an omer full of manna therein, and lay it up before the Lord, to be kept for your generations." (Ex. 16: 33)

On the reverse is a branch with three blossoms, thought to represent Aaron's rod that "budded and brought forth buds, and bloomed blossoms and yielded almonds." (Num. 17: 8) The inscription on the reverse is "Jerusalem the Holy."

The almond tree - first to blossom in the spring, even before winter is over, became the symbol of divine promptitude and watchfulness. Bowls of the golden candlestick and of the virgin's lamp were made almond-shaped.

BOLIVIAN "TAKE-HOME" COLLECTORS

The monetary needs of the early Spaniards in South America created a number of small mints scattered throughout wide areas, which in itself was a drawback, but the real difficulty lay in the fact that too many mint workers were taking home samples. The loss through this pilfering became so great that it was decided to centralize the coinage in Potosi, and work on the moneda (Mint) got under way in 1753.

Potosi, the city of the Silver Mill, was the irresistible lure that led the Spanish explorers to brave the tremendous altitude of mountain passages with its dreaded soroche which developed when breath came in gasps and blood spurted from nose and mouth, to reach their goal 16,006 feet above sea level. Potosi was the fabulous city that spent ten million dollars celebrating the coronation of Philip II of Spain.

It was a gigantic task in planning and erecting the Mint, and expensive. The building was a huge structure covering two blocks, with a crown of barrel vaulting over which ran steps for the sentinels. When the work was commenced in 1753, special roads were made to bring huge wooden beams from Oran in Argentina. These were dragged by an army of Indians with mules. The coinage presses, made entirely of wood and hauled by natives over seven hundred miles, did not begin coining until seven years later, though it actually took twenty years before the Mint was completely finished. From 1760 to 1872 this wooden machinery was in constant use striking off a billion and a half silver bolivianos, and two million gold pieces. Silver from the mines was coined and returned after a deducted tax of twenty percent went into the officials.

On the floor beneath the machinery countless mules turned the wheels for over one hundred and twelve years. It was due to these mules that the Mint officials were finally forced to resort to steam presses. Despite constant vigilance of guards and the careful search of each Mint worker, a regular leakage occurred. Eventually it was discovered that the Indians were filling the ears of their animals with silver and smuggling it out.

Changing their tactics at this revelation, they began to feed the patient mules the silver, and to even hide the same in the sores and cuts of these hard working beasts.

In 1872, Bolivia adopted steam machinery. Twenty-five years later
